Read the text carefully then do the following activities:

Martin Luther King was a great American who worked for civil rights in the United States in the 1950s and 60s. He fought for the rights of African Americans and many people, blacks as well as whites, supported him. In 1964 he received the Nobel Peace Prize.

Martin Luther King saw that black people were badly treated so during the 1950s he became involved in the Civil Rights Movement. In 1955, a black woman, Rosa Parks, was arrested because she didn't give up her seat to a white person on a bus. This incident made many blacks angry. They protested and decided to boycott the city's buses. Martin Luther King became the president of this boycott.

White terrorists started to bomb King's home and wanted to force him to give up his fight for equal rights. But King wasn't afraid. He continued working for the black people in America. At that time, blacks and whites were separated in schools, restaurants, sport and in other fields.

In 1963, Martin Luther King organized a big protest march in Washington D.C. Hundreds of thousands of Americans, black and white, took part. At the Lincoln Memorial King held his most famous speech: "I have a dream". The march was a big success. After Kennedy was killed in November 1963, the next American government passed a law called the Civil Rights Act that gave blacks the same rights as white people and the same opportunities in education and work. It also gave them the rights to vote.

Martin Luther King's life came to a sudden end. On April 4, 1968, he was killed by a white racist. Today, Americans celebrate him each year in January, the month in which he was born.
